44, For generations family and community members have gathered to hear folks like John Griffin of Lenox play the fiddle. As he learned his tunes from others before him, so have others learned from him. Here, John Griffin plays a tune while his brother Arthur “beats straws”, adding a staccato rhythmic drone by striking the violin strings with a broom straw. Photo by Carl Fleischhauer, 1977.

PHOTO FRAME #	SUBJECT
1	Jim L. Gillis, Jr., one of the major names in the history of the turpentine industry in the American South, sits in his office at the Bank of Soperton in Soperton, GA.
2	A look from across the main road at Jim Gillis' home in Soperton, GA. This lavish home and yard are not typical of most former turpentiners' homes; a small minority of turpentine producers was, however, able to accumulate great wealth from their involvement in the industry.
3	A closer look at the Gillis home.
4	J. F. Wilcox poses for the camera after an interview at his kitchen table in Ludowici, GA.
5	Bernice Wilcox also poses for the camera after a joint interview with her husband J. F.
6	J. F. and Bernice Wilcox pose for a shot in front of their home on RR1 in Ludowici.
7	From across RR1, a look at the modest home of J. F. and Bernice Wilcox.
8	The Wilcox residence from the left side of the house.
9	The Wilcox residence from the right side of the house.
10	Another look at the Wilcox home, this time from more of a head-on angle. Notice the welcome sign to the right of their porch steps that reads, "The Wilcox's."

8a-12a, box sculptures and memory art by George Thomas, originally of Atlanta, GA now of Idlewild, Michigan, at the 2001 Great Lakes Folk Festival Folk Art Marketplace, East Lansing, August 2001. From the festival program bio: “Box Sculptures George Thomas, Idlewild, Mich.

Born in Atlanta, Georgia in 1940, George Thomas was raised in a family of eight children who moved to Detroit and finally to Idlewild, where he now lives. Using weather-beaten wood, old bed sheets, wire, plaster of Paris, and miscellaneous found and scrap objects, he creates framed three-dimensional sculptures. He depicts memories of his childhood in Georgia, for example, children in a one-room schoolhouse learning about African-American history, a woman quilting on the porch, a family at the supper table, and a church congregation listening to a preacher.

George uses his box sculptures to help others recognize the importance of African-American heritage. He has participated in youth education programs where he enjoys talking about his art and encouraging young people to make their own boxes.”

| 1 | One of George Music, Jr.'s numerous pickup trucks in the front yard of his mobile home. In the background, his field of corn meets on the horizon with his many acres of dense turpentine woods. |
| 2 | From the same place in Music's front yard, three more pickup trucks. Notice at the end of the rows of corn (in the middle of the photo) Music's old house, built circa 1900, where his mother still resides. |
| 3 | A look out over the vast land located alongside George Music Rd. These thousands of acres adjacent to Music's property were once used for turpentine as well. |
| 4 | A similar shot to the last one, only in the opposite direction, to present some sort of idea of just how grand these woods really are. |
| 5 | Looking up George Music Rd. from in front of Music's home. |

- 6 At the beginning of George Music Rd., looking down it towards the Music's homes and dense forest of natural standing timber.
- 7 Sitting atop and perpendicular to the stop sign is the George Music Rd. sign.
- 8 The front of Music's current home behind his rows of corn in the front yard. Notice the garage to the right of the house where he does his mechanical work.
- 9 A view from behind Music's home.
- 10 A close-up of the rear end of one of Music's many International pickup trucks in front of his home. Notice the blue bumper sticker on the right side of the bumper which reads, "Bluegrass music. Hear it. Play it. Love it!"
- 11 A look at the front of Music's home.
- 12 Music and Tim Prizer (fieldworker) in Music's home.
- 13 Music and Tri-County band members rehearse before taking the stage to perform at the Z-Way Truck Stop in Waycross. Pictured from left to right are George Music, Jr., Sue Shadron, Will Schuller, and former turpentineer himself, Billy Crews.
- 14 In further rehearsal, Music saws his fiddle while Schuller picks the banjo and Sue Shadron keeps time on the upright bass.
- 15 Still warming up, Sue Shadron, Music, Bill Shadron, Schuller and Freddy Combs pick a tune.
- 16 A view from a distance of Waycross' Z-Way Truck Stop which George Music visits daily and where his bluegrass band frequently performs.
- 17 A close-up of the same building.
- 18 The Tri-County bluegrass band performing on stage in front of the Z-Way Truck Stop. From extreme left to right: Crews, Combs, Bill Shadron, Music, Schuller, and Sue Shadron.
- 19 A close-up of Crews, Shadron, Music and Combs (partly hidden by Music) performing on stage.

- 20 A look at Tri-County performing as the sun goes down. Music stands with the fiddle in the center with Bill Shadron and Freddy Combs to the left and Will Schuller and Sue Shadron to the right.
- 21 A shot of the entire band performing. From left to right: Crews, Bill Shadron, Combs, Music, Sue Shadron, and Schuller. The Shadron's and Music harmonize on the song's chorus.
- 22 A look at two men enjoying the picking of Tri-County in front of the Z-Way Truck Stop.
- 23 Centered in this photo is Billy Crews who worked turpentine for several years in south Georgia. To his left are Bill Shadron and Freddy Combs.
- 24 Another look at Tri-County performing underneath the American flag. From left to right: Bill Shadron, Combs, Music, Sue Shadron and Schuller.
- 25 A different view of the entire band on stage.
- 26 George Music looks directly at the camera as he saws his fiddle with the rest of his band mates.
- 27 A classic American photograph of an empty bluegrass stage, complete with lavalier microphones and the American flag.
- 28 A close-up of Music and Sue Shadron harmonizing on Bill Monroe's "Blue Moon of Kentucky" as Tri-County performs it.
- 29 In Junior Taylor's backyard, thousands of turpentine cups, several metal turpentine barrels, and stacks of firewood.
- 30 Leaning up against Junior Taylor's tool shed are the top of a metal turpentine barrel and a puller.
- 31 A wagon that was once drawn by mules in many of Taylor's turpentine camps now sits in his fenced dog pen.
- 32 Junior Taylor poses in front of the same wagon in his backyard.
- 33 A close-up of Junior Taylor as he stands in his front driveway.
- 34 The front of Junior Taylor's home on Allen Ave. in Blackshear.

- 12 The charging of the still continues as thick white smoke meets the backdrop of dark green trees
- 13 A clown stands on stage with two volunteers during his performance
- 14 A man continues to chop firewood for use in the still's furnace
- 15 A man listens carefully in the spirit room to determine whether or not to add more water to the brewing turpentine
- 16 Turpentine runs into a wooden barrel in the spirit room
- 17 A rusted and dented dip bucket on display in the "museum"
- 18 A look at the various tubes working as channels from barrel to barrel to in the spirit room
- 19 A water hose has been added to the barrel of turpentine; notice the white notepad and clear jar that the workers use to track the progress of the turpentine
- 20 A closer look at the barrel, the turpentine, and the garden hose adding water to the mix
- 21 Another man removes his hat to test the progress of the turpentine
- 22 A close look at the notepad on which a man tracks the time, the temperature, the levels, and other various notes throughout the production of the turpentine
- 23 As the wooden barrel in the background fills almost to its limit, it is channeled through a tube into a white plastic barrel

- 24 A man climbs the stairs from the spirit room to the main level of the still to check the progress of the charge
- 25 A look over the top of the spirit room/"museum" at the smoke pouring from both the chimney and the still tub

| 1 | Along the main nature trail at the Herty Nature Preserve are several wooden bridges, one of which is depicted here. |
| 2 | Another of the bridges that winds its way along the trail. |
| 3 | This pine, though still standing, has been deeply gutted and burned in its interior. It is unclear whether or not this activity was related in any way to the naval stores industry. |

- 4 The same tree as in the last frame, this time from a closer side angle that allows one to see just how deeply the pine has been gutted. It is possible that the tree once had a face used for the production of turpentine.
