ADDRESS BY J. E. F. MATTHEWS, ORDINARY,
UPSON COUNTY, GEORGIA

Mr. Chairman, Veterans, Sons of Veterans, and Daughters of the Confederacy:

This is a grand occasion and a great day in the history of Upson County. We join with you in your song of praise—

“All hail to the morning that bids us rejoice;
The capstone is finished, exalt high each voice.”

We are glad to give special honor to Sharman of Upson Chapter of the United Daughters of the Confederacy for their patriotic services in building and completing this beautiful monument, erected in memory of the glorious deeds of the Confederate soldier, whether he served on land or on sea.

When the martial strains of Dixie rallied the South to arms in defense of her rights, I was a boy eight years of age, living in the country, ten miles east of Thomaston, Georgia, and nine miles south of Barnesville, Georgia. My maternal grandfather resided in Barnesville. He was a God-fearing and liberty-loving son of a distinguished officer of the Revolutionary War, and was inspired with great love for the South. He gave a dinner and made a speech to the Barnesville Blues just before they left for the war. I remember the Barnesville Blues. The Holloway Grays were made up of men and boys from our immediate neighborhood, and the place of meeting for, organization and drills was the old Upson camp ground, called Camp Murphey, seven miles east of Thomaston, Georgia, and one mile south of The Rock, Georgia. A member of this company, in the early part of 1861, was the teacher of the school on the little red hill near our home. Boys of the school of military age joined the Holloway Grays and went to the front, never to return. They died for the land they loved.

Brave boys! Their gallant and devoted spirits passed from us

"Into that beautiful land,
The far-away home of the soul."

Another member of this company, after the close of the war, became our teacher at the old Upson camp ground, and later became the President of Gordon Institute. I remember the Holloway Grays and the Barnesville Blues.

During the last two years of the terrible strife between the States, the South realized the horrors of war. Battle after battle had been fought, leaving on each bloody field a rolling wilderness of graves and hospitals over-crowded. The Southern people opened their homes as hospitals and cared for the sick and wounded. At my father's house was a Confederate soldier by the name of Hays from Jacksonville, Alabama, who had lost a leg in the battle of Chickamauga. When he was able to go on crutches, he formed us school boys into a company of soldiers, with sticks from the woods for guns, and we went through the drills and the manual of arms with much satisfaction and pride to ourselves, if not to our commanding officer. He was our captain and companion in arms. Such is my experience as a soldier in the days of my early youth.

To Camp Gordon of the United Confederate Veterans is due much credit for my being able to make a permanent record of some of the soldiers from this county. I here give a list of the eleven companies of Upson county, Georgia, that served in the army of the Confederate States of America in the war between the States from 1861 to 1865, together with the names of the officers, name and letter of the company, number of the regiment, and names and postoffice addresses of two or more of the surviving members of each company, at this time, May 2, 1908.

Before giving this list, I pray you to listen to some lines by Rev. W. W. Pinson on the "Heroes in Gray":

From under the battle cloud, bearing their scars,
With escutcheons as fair as the radiant stars,
Shot, torn, and saber-hacked heroes in gray,
Time-worn and time-weary, greet us to-day.
Let us press the scarred hands that have grappled and fought
And cheer with our might for the deeds they have wrought.

They paid their round price for the chaplet of fame,
Which they worthily wear without boasting or shame;
They fawn for no praise, they blush from no blame;
They grudge not the hunger, the hardship and pain,
The ice in the trenches, the blood on the plain,
If but truly we reckon the valorous cost
Of the service they gave to the cause that was lost.

When they folded the flag with a sob and a tear,
They turned to the home land with courage and cheer
To work without cringing as they'd fought without fear;
And there's a light on the hearthstone and hope in the sky
Of the homes of the Southland that never shall die,
Because of the valor that wields without dread
The weapons of toil in the battle for bread.

With deeds to remember and woes to forget,
They're dreaming of glory awaiting us yet,
And helping to win it, as erst they have won
A glory as stainless and white as the sun.
Undismayed in life's battle, they scorn to repine;
At the drum tap of duty they fall into line.

Too brave for regretting, too noble for spite,
They wait the fair verdict of justice and right
That forever must win over malice and might,
And the meed of the brave from the hearts of the true
Unstinted they pay to their brothers in blue.
They live for the battle-scarred country they love,
And would die for the flag floating proudly above.
Then uncover and stand! they are passing, make way!
And lift a loud cheer for the heroes in gray.

The first company left Thomaston on Tuesday, May 7, 1861, forty-seven years ago, and was known as the Upson Guards, Company K, Fifth Georgia Regiment, with the following officers: Thomas Beall captain, William G. Horsley first lieutenant, William O. Sandwich second lieutenant, Jacob S. King third lieutenant, A. S. Brooks, ensign, E. A. Flewellen surgeon, James H. Rogers first sergeant, F. J. Upson county furnished more than twelve hundred men to the Confederate army. She furnished more soldiers than she had voters. It is said that the patriotism of the South robbed the cradle and the grave, boys and old men enlisting in the Southern army. Fifty-one Confederate soldiers who died in the hospitals in Thomaston, Georgia, in 1864, have at the heads of their graves in the Thomaston cemetery marble slabs with inscriptions, showing that they were from a half dozen different Southern States, to-wit: South Carolina, North Carolina, Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, Arkansas, Tennessee and Georgia. Some of the graves are marked "unknown."

The State of Georgia has provided a Soldiers' Home for the Confederate soldiers, and gives every year to about fifteen thousand soldiers and widows of soldiers about one million dollars. Last year (1907) ninety-six pensioners of Upson county were given $5,550.

America has had many wars:

1. War of the Revolution, seven years, 1775-1782.
2. Indian War in Ohio Territory, 1790.
3. War with the Barbary States, 1803-1804.
4. Tecumseh Indian War, 1811.
5. War with Great Britain, three years, 1812-1815.
6. Algerine War, 1815.
7. First Seminole War, 1817.
8. Black Hawk War, 1832.
9. Second Seminole War, 1845.
10. Mexican War, two years, 1846-1848.
11. Mormon War, 1856.
12. Civil War, four years, 1861-1865.
13. Spanish-American War, April 21 to July 20, 1898.

The Civil War has been truly characterized as one of the most tremendous conflicts on record. The people of all nations looked on in wonder and amazement. Volumes have been published about this war—its origin, causes, conduct, guilt, crimes, consequences, and results, as well as its sufferings, sacrifices, and heroic exploits.

Eleven of the Southern States, from December, 1860, to June, 1861, with numbers of individuals and organized commands from the three border States of Kentucky, Missouri and Maryland, seceded from the Union and united their destinies with the land of the South. A separate government was established and called "The Confederate States of America," with its capital at Richmond, Virginia. And it had its national flag and a patriotic and gallant army to defend it. That flag emblemized its nationality and waved defiantly for four years over our Confederate armies that guarded its citadel. To disestablish this government of Confederate States, it required 2,259,059 gallant and well equipped Federal soldiers, four years, fighting hundreds of battles, with a loss of more than half a million men, and at a cost in money of four or five billions of dollars. And this, too, in the face of the fact that the Confederate States had on their army rolls, from first to last during our four years' strife, less than six hundred thousand men.

Secretary of War Stanton, in his report, dated July 19, 1866, shows the comparative deaths in prison of Federal and Confederate soldiers, as follows:

Confederates in Northern prisons, 220,000; Union soldiers in Southern prisons, 270,000; excess of Union prisoners, 50,000; deaths in Northern prisons, 26,436; deaths in Southern prisons, 22,756.

Sickness, sufferings, and death, in prison, on the weary march, in hospitals of pain, on the bloody battle field—everywhere, warn us of the horrors of war. Far from home and loved ones many of our dead are sleeping:

"In Virginia's green valleys and mountains,
By the Cumberland fast rolling deep,
In Kentucky, by Gettysburg's fountains,
Our fallen brave soldiers now sleep,
In grandeur above the still waves.
In Florida's orchards of flowers may be found
Our dead soldiers' graves.
On Kennesaw and near our Savannah,
Where live oaks o'ershadow the ground,
Round Macon and smoking Atlanta
Our noble dead heroes are found."

It may be well to have inscribed on our Confederate monument, "Lest we forget." But they shall not be forgotten. Did I say "forgotten?" A thousand spiritual echoes take up and prolong that word, half in mournful inquiry, half in solemn admonition, they roll down upon us like distant muffled thunders of the awakened sea to dwellers of the inland hills. They shall not be forgotten. Their glorious deeds shall live in song and story and

"Shall go sounding down the ages
Of years to come."

The brave men and noble women of the South, their sons and daughters, who heard and saw, felt and suffered, the horrors of war, may appreciate the blessings of peace and rejoice in a re-united country.

"Truth crushed to earth, shall rise again;
The eternal years of God are hers."

R. E. Lee, for whom our Institute is named, was one of the greatest soldiers the world ever saw, and one of the noblest spirits. He illustrated in his life and in his farewell to the Southern people, that "the virtues of humanity ought always to equal its trials."

The President of the Confederacy, Jefferson Davis, born 1808, died 1889, delivered, in 1888, his last speech to his "friends," as follows:

"Mr. Chairman and Fellow Citizens: Pardon me; the laws of the United States no longer permit me to designate you as 'fellow citizens,' but I am thankful that I may address you as my friends. I feel no regret that I stand before you a man without a country, for my ambition lies in the grave of the Confederacy. There has been consigned, not only my ambition, but the dogmas upon which that government was based. The faces I see before me are those of young men. Had I not known this I would not have appeared before you. Men in whose hands the destinies of our Southland lie: For love of her I break my silence to speak to you a few words of respectful admonition. The past is dead; let it bury its dead, its hopes, and aspirations.

Before you lies the future, a future full of golden promise, a future of expanding national glory, before which all the world shall stand amazed. Let me beseech you to lay aside all rancor, all bitter sectional feelings, and to take your places in the ranks of those who will bring about a consummation devoutly to be desired — a re-united country."

Paul H. Hayne, one of the South's greatest poets, sings in gratitude of the union of the Blue and the Gray:

"All Nature whispers: War is o'er,
Fierce feuds have fled our sea and shore.
Old wrongs forget, old ties renew,
O heroes of the Gray and Blue!"

It is according to the teachings of the Divine Master—"they shall beat their swords into plowshares, and their spears into pruning hooks."

Francis Miles Finch sang in sweetest words:

"No more shall the war-cry sever,
Or the winding rivers be red;
They banish our anger forever,
When they laurel the graves of our dead.
Under the sod and the dew,
Waiting the judgment day;
Love and tears for the Blue,
Tears and love for the Gray."

History in all ages teaches that the bravest soldiers have always been the first to banish from their hearts the enmities which have their origin in the strife of battle. The most bloody of the English wars comes down to us under the softest and sweetest of names. It is called the War of the Roses. And under that gentle and poetic designation lie concealed the features of a struggle the most ferocious of any in the annals of warfare, waged as it was between brothers and kinsmen.

To-day the English people, in pointing with pride to the heroic deeds of that terrible strife, never ask whether the knight, whose valor added renown to English prowess, fought under the colors of the red rose of York or under the banner of the white rose of Lancaster; and the people of France to-day erect monuments to the true hero, whether he fought in the ranks of the royalists or under the tricolor of the Republic.

It is said that during our Civil War, two young and devoted brothers fought on opposite sides and were killed in the same battle.

A mother knelt,

“Each thin hand resting on a grave,
Her lips apart in prayer.”

Listen how she prays:

“The shadows fall upon their graves,
They fall upon my heart.
And through the twilight of my soul,
Like dew, the tears will start;
The starlight comes so silently,
And lingers where they rest.
So hope’s revealing starlight falls
And sinks within my breast.
They will not ask in yonder Heaven.
Where smiles eternal day,
Why Willie went to wear the Blue,
Why Harry wore the Gray.”

The women of the Confederacy displayed a heroism unparalleled in the history of the world. Their devotion and God-like fortitude proved them to be “fit companions for the glorious men who stormed the heights of Gettysburg and marched to death across Franklin’s bloody plain.” They are deserving of all honor, all praise, all glory. The noblest creation of Almighty God—the Women of the Confederacy. Their life, their fortitude, their grandeur, stand forever an inspiration for all that is high, and all that is pure, and all that is good.
