This club has chosen to help the needy people of Europe for its project for the year. They are now sending packages each month to a nineteen year old girl in Holland.

Two girls fix a package each month with clothes and food, with the money donated by the members.

Harriett Arrington, chairman of the program committee, Laura Converse, and Ruth Black, gave an interesting program about ships, their beauty and their uses.

Hostesses serving for this meeting were Carolyn Mathis and Jean Martin.

International Relations Club Convention Held Here At The University Of Georgia

By SPEIR COLLINS

Kirk McAlpin, Savannah, law student of the International Relations Club of Georgia, was elected the first president of the International Relations Club of Georgia, a statewide collegiate group organized in Athens Saturday.

Vice president of the University of Georgia IRC, McAlpin was chosen to head the new state organization by acclamation of the seven colleges and universities represented at the meeting.

Other officers elected were Frank Lastra, Tampa Fla., Georgia Tech, vice president; Betty Hayes, Milledgeville, Georgia State College for Women, secretary-treasurer; and Emmitt E. Noland Jr., Athens, University of Georgia, corresponding secretary.

Institutions represented in the formation of the organization were Bessie Tift College, Brenau College, Emory University, the Georgia School of Technology, the Georgia State College for Women, Wesleyan College, and the University of Georgia. The largest out-of-town representation was from G.S.C.W., which sent a delegation of 10.

Ralph Williams, Crawfordville, president of the host club, presided over the luncheon meeting at the N & N Cafeteria and the afternoon business session in the Commerce-Journalism Building.

Luncheon Speakers

Speakers at the luncheon included Anne Wells, Milledgeville, a member of the G.S.C.W. delegation, who discussed "The Importance of Student Opinion on International Affairs." She characterized student opinion as "a Niagara of potential power" in helping to formulate and guide public opinion regarding world affairs.

Describing what a student should get from a college education Miss Wells asserted that the student has the right to expect his college to give him a heritage from the past; to teach him universal truths rather than trivial things; and to make him aware of what is going on in the world today. She called for "a Renaissance spirit—ever looking for the truth."

McAlpin reported on the visit made by him and Marion L. Bridges, Sumner, to the United Nations Security Council in New York last summer. He told of meeting students from many other colleges and universities and of attending U. N. sessions which featured debates by delegates

Gromyko of Russia, Evatt of Australia, Cadogan of England, and Johnson of the United States.

Admitting that weaknesses exist in the present U. N. Charter, McAlpin urged that students study that document. He asked them to have faith in the U. N., to help improve it, and to help build up mutual trust among nations.

William Tate, dean of students, welcomed the convention delegates to Athens and commended them on their serious attitude toward world problems.

Other University of Georgia officials attending the session were Dr. E. Merton Coulter, head of the history department, who founded the local IRC; Dean S. Walter Martin of Coordinate Campus; J. Chal Vinson, history instructor and IRC faculty adviser; and Mrs. Vinson.

Accompanying delegations of students from their respective institutions were Dr. Helen I. Greene of G. S. C. W. and Prof. James W. Moffitt of Bessie Tift College.

Primary business of the afternoon was the adoption of a constitution for the new organization. The document adopted states that:

Purpose Of Club

"The purpose of this club shall be to support discussion of world affairs from an unprejudiced and objective point of view, but not to support exclusively any one view as to how it would be best to treat the conditions which prevail throughout the world.

"It shall further be our purpose to exert mutual effort to fix the attention of all members on those underlying principles of international conduct, of international law and of international organization which must be agreed upon and put into action if a peaceful civilization is to continue."

Mary A. McCravey, law student at the University of Georgia, introduced the draft from which the constitution was adopted, and presented a series of proposed resolutions which are to be studied by the individual clubs and voted on at the next meeting.

The cabinet of the state organization voted to accept the invitation of Emory, Tech, and Agnes Scott to hold the next annual convention in Atlanta during the winter quarter of 1948.

Chairman of arrangements for the Athens convention was Oscar

Dear Miss Price:

The International Relations Club of our College has been discussing prospects of a State Convention early next year, preparatory to the Southeastern Conference in March. Last year we invited the Georgia Clubs to our campus, for a one-day (Saturday) meeting, and this year we hope that another school will sponsor such a convention.

Are you interested in participating in a State meeting?

Could you be host to the meeting? If not, do you think any certain club of the twenty-four listed by the Carnegie Endowment Report last spring would be particularly suited to act as host? Would late January be a good time for you?

If you can place this matter before your club, or its officers, and let us have a reply before Christmas vacation begins, we shall appreciate it.
